

Soul of the cello

Ojai master Brian Lisus has been crafting instruments for 45 years. He builds them by hand, one by one, every instrument lovingly shaped for the musician it is meant for.

His latest creation, a cello commissioned by a Hong Kong musician, has been delayed from its journey to finally be united with its musician by the pandemic.

"I sometimes feel as if the musician is right there in the workshop, as every instrument somehow turns out to have the quality of sound they desire.

This is still a great mystery to me, as working more by feel than by science one can not analyze this rationally."

This gives Ojai the unique opportunity to hear the cello in concert one single time, and to learn more about Brian's art.
